A film about the elements – hurricanes and rain, the sea and the earth.

About a fishing port on the north coast of Cuba which has seen better days: Caibarién, where Hurricane Irma – one of the most powerful ever to sweep the Caribbean – made landfall on 9th September 2017.

About the effects of climate across the centuries in a Caribbean island sucked into global markets for its commodity crops – tobacco, coffee and above all, sugar. How sugar changed the landscape, through deforestation and soil exhaustion.

About the collapse of sugar and the encroachment of a new commodity market – tourism.

About the growing threat from climate change, and the move towards reforestation, ecotourism and sustainable farming.

“Living between hurricanes has conditioned our lives; it has modified our geographies and spurred our migrations. And it has also educated us in the need to work to reverse their damage.”

Cuban President, Miguel Díaz-Canel, 2019
Filmed, edited and directed by Michael Chanan

Written and Produced by Jonathan Curry-Machado and Jean Stubbs

Made under the aegis of School of Advanced Study, University of London, for the Commodities of Empire British Academy Research Project in collaboration with
Fundación Antonio Núñez Jiménez de la Naturaleza y el Hombre

ICAIC

Funded by the AHRC